Orca Guardians is an Iceland-registered, independent nonprofit organisation and is not organised for the gain of any person or company.

Náttúrustofa Vesturlands (the West Iceland Nature Research Centre) is one of eight independent regional research centres in Iceland, which operate according to Icelandic legislation no. 60/1992.

The identification catalogue is available for download at: www.orcaguardians.org
It has been made publicly available to researchers, whale watchers, and whale-watch operators to enhance observations and facilitate identification of the Icelandic killer whale population. Other catalogues on killer whale identification were established by Hafrannsóknastofnun in 1993 and 2017.

PREFACE

When I went on my first Icelandic killer whale watching tour with Láki Tours almost exactly eight years ago, on the 16th of January, 2014, I was overwhelmed by the sight of killer whales feasting on herring in a pristine environment, and the hundreds of birds taking part in the feeding frenzy. So much so that when the boss of the whale watching company, Gísli Ólafsson (who had just brought me in as a killer whale expert), asked me afterwards how many killer whales I had counted... I had absolutely no idea and feared that I would be kicked out of the company on my first day. I made a promise to myself on that same day to count and record the killer whales of West Iceland whenever I could get a chance. This catalogue with its nearly one thousand individuals from over 600 sightings is proof that I have not stopped counting ever since.

The extensive list of acknowledgements in this catalogue includes all the wonderful people that have contributed to and supported this project throughout the years, some of them dear friends and colleagues without whom I could not have done it. I consider myself incredibly lucky and privileged to be an ambassador for killer whales – the animals I have loved and admired from a very young age.

Thanks to year-round efforts at Snæfellsnes since 2014, we are now at the stage that we better understand the killer whales we see in West Iceland not only on a population level, but on an individual – and sometimes “personal” – level. How many offspring do they have? What are their travel routes? Who interacts and travels with whom? What do they feed on? We can answer these questions for some individuals, and for others we have little to no evidence. And yet, every time we have another killer whale encounter, we add another piece to the puzzle. A puzzle which will never be complete, no matter how hard we try, as killer whales are some of the most complex, intelligent, and empathetic animals on our planet – and they seem to be always miles ahead of us in the game.

INTRODUCTION

PAST TO PRESENT

Killer whales (Orcinus orca) in Iceland are known to occur in coastal herring grounds in larger aggregations at certain times of the year, whereas they can be observed opportunistically in smaller groups travelling along the Icelandic shoreline year-round. Following the arrival of larger amounts of summer-spawning Atlantic herring (Clupea harengus) on the Icelandic west coast, particularly the Snæfellsnes Peninsula, in the winter of 2009, a greater number of killer whales than before had been noted in the area starting from winter 2010 (Stefánsson & von Schmalensee, 2013). Killer whales had been spotted by fishermen along the peninsula before 2010, but mostly during the spring and summertime, and in smaller aggregations travelling through Breiðafjörður (Gísli Ólafsson and Skarphéðinn Ólafsson, pers. comm.).

In January 2014, year-round systematical data collection started onboard the vessels of Láki Tours Whale Watching – the primary aim at the time being the recognition of individual killer whales for onboard education purposes. As the project grew and started to deliver significant findings relevant for both research and conservation, identification work was officially taken over by Orca Guardians Iceland shortly after the nonprofit's foundation in May 2016. The catalogue was then further developed as a logical progression of ongoing efforts, also including images from the early years of killer whale occurrence in the smaller fjords of the Snæfellsnes Peninsula (2011–2013). There were three previous catalogue editions in 2015, 2016, and 2017 (Mruszczok, 2015; Mruszczok, 2016; Mruszczok, 2017).

In 2021, Orca Guardians Iceland deepened its partnership with the West Iceland Nature Research Centre (Náttúrustofa Vesturlands) to create an updated and revised version of the catalogue. As a result, the 2022 catalogue presented here is a scientific report of the West Iceland Nature Research Centre, and is used as a tool to aid in conservation work, for the long-term monitoring of the population, and as a reference document for ongoing and future research.

MAIN OBJECTIVE

An overall aim of the year-round identification work at Snæfellsnes both from land and from sea is to record as many individual killer whales as possible moving through the area, with as few knowledge gaps as possible, extending fieldwork over the longest achievable period of time. This will help identify possible critical habitat, important feeding grounds, and behavioural patterns of the Icelandic killer whale population, and will thus provide crucial knowledge for conservation measures.

ETHICAL STATEMENT

Orca Guardians' core task is to ensure the welfare of individual wild killer whales, and of the Icelandic killer whale population as a whole. Therefore, any research conducted by Orca Guardians Iceland is critically monitored for its non-invasive character and application of the precautionary approach (Campbell & Thomas, 2006).

We value killer whales as individuals with unique character traits, and promote respectful and mindful encounters with them.

Photo-identification images presented in this catalogue have been collected both via land and boat encounters. Whereas land sightings can be considered non-invasive by nature, data collection from the boat was carried out under strict compliance with the Ice Whale Code of Conduct for responsible whale watching (Ice Whale, 2015). Data collection on sea was conducted on board the boats of Láki Tours Whale Watching, and during company operating hours to minimize a possible negative impact and to avoid having more than one boat in the vicinity of killer whales at any given time.

Code of Conduct for responsible whale watching

ICE WHALE icewhale.is

We have to remember that these are wild animals and to enjoy them for the future we need to show them patience and respect. We will try to get you close but how close we get is always on the animal's terms as we aim to minimise disturbance.

This is a Code of Conduct we aim to abide by, however, there are many variables to consider when out at sea, such as the weather, number of whales, prey availability, if there are calves present, animal behaviour and so on and so forth.

Searching-Zone (3000m >)
Keep a dedicated lookout and stay in radio contact with other vessels (approaching and departing).
Avoid making sudden or excessive noises and disturbance for the cetacean.
Avoid sudden speed or course changes (approaching and departing).
Assess the cetacean behaviour and avoid repeated attempts to interact with animals that are showing signs of distress.

Approaching-Zone (300m >)
Aim at maintaining a distance of 300 m at the beginning of the encounter and gradually get closer with time.
Stop the main propeller (max speed ~5-6 mph). If the cetacean is travelling fast you can speed up a little (up to ~8 mph) but not directly towards the animal.
Avoid following behind cetacean and never deliberately approach directly in front. Vessel movements should parallel them by approaching cautiously at an oblique angle (from behind).
Don't come closer if there is another boat in the approaching zone, unless the other boat gives away or signals that it is safe to approach.
Take turns if there are more boats in the area, preferably each boat shouldn't spend more than 20-30 minutes within the area at once.
Never (deliberately) sail through pods of concentrated cetacean.
Keep a steady speed if dolphins approach the vessel and start bow-riding or slowly stop and let them pass.
Ekki skal gera tilraunir til að hvetja höfrunga til að synda í bógöldu skipsins.
Ensure that the vessel does not disturb nesting or resting birds.

Caution-Zone (50m >)
When possible, stop the propeller if cetacean approaches the vessel and do not re-engage propulsion until the cetacean is observed well clear of your vessel.
Do not touch, swim with or feed cetacean.

No Head-On Approach Zone

Propeller stopped

Reduce speed to -5.6 mph, limit number of vessels, ~20-30 min

Reduce speed, keep a lookout and stay in radio contact

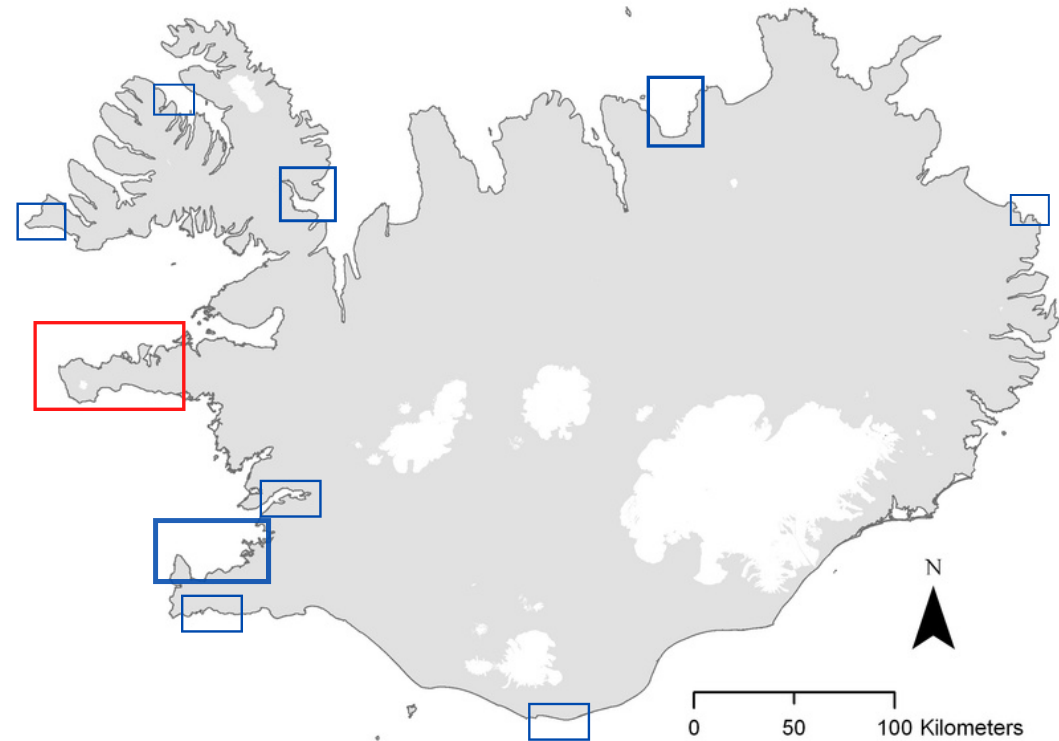

If you think that this Code of Conduct has not been fulfilled please discuss it with the crew and/or contact the IceWhale office (e-mail info@icewhale.is)

Between March and June of 2021, due to the circumstances around COVID-19 and a lack of passengers and boat trips, five research surveys were conducted in Breiðafjörður with one of the whale watching boats. During all encounters on sea, behavioural patterns of the animals were monitored closely for any signs of distress, in which case the distance to the individuals was increased or the area left completely. Identification images presented in this catalogue are cropped and enlarged, and are not representative for the distance between vessel and individual at the time they were taken.

METHODOLOGY

SAMPLING AREA AND TIMEFRAME

Identification images of killer whales found in the coastal waters of the Snæfellsnes Peninsula were collected from February 2011 to December 2021. As a long-term study, identification work in this area is ongoing year-round. Whereas the Snæfellsnes Peninsula (indicated in red) constitutes the main area of data collection, images contributed to the project from other areas of Iceland were included in the catalogue as well. Other areas (indicated in blue) included Steingrímsfjörður, Ísafjörður and Látrabjarg in the Westfjords; Skjálfandi Bay in the North; Borgarfjörður eystri in the East, and areas further east of Iceland; Hvalfjörður, the waters south of Grindavík, and Faxaflói Bay in the Southwest near Reykjavík; and the waters south of Vík in the South of Iceland.

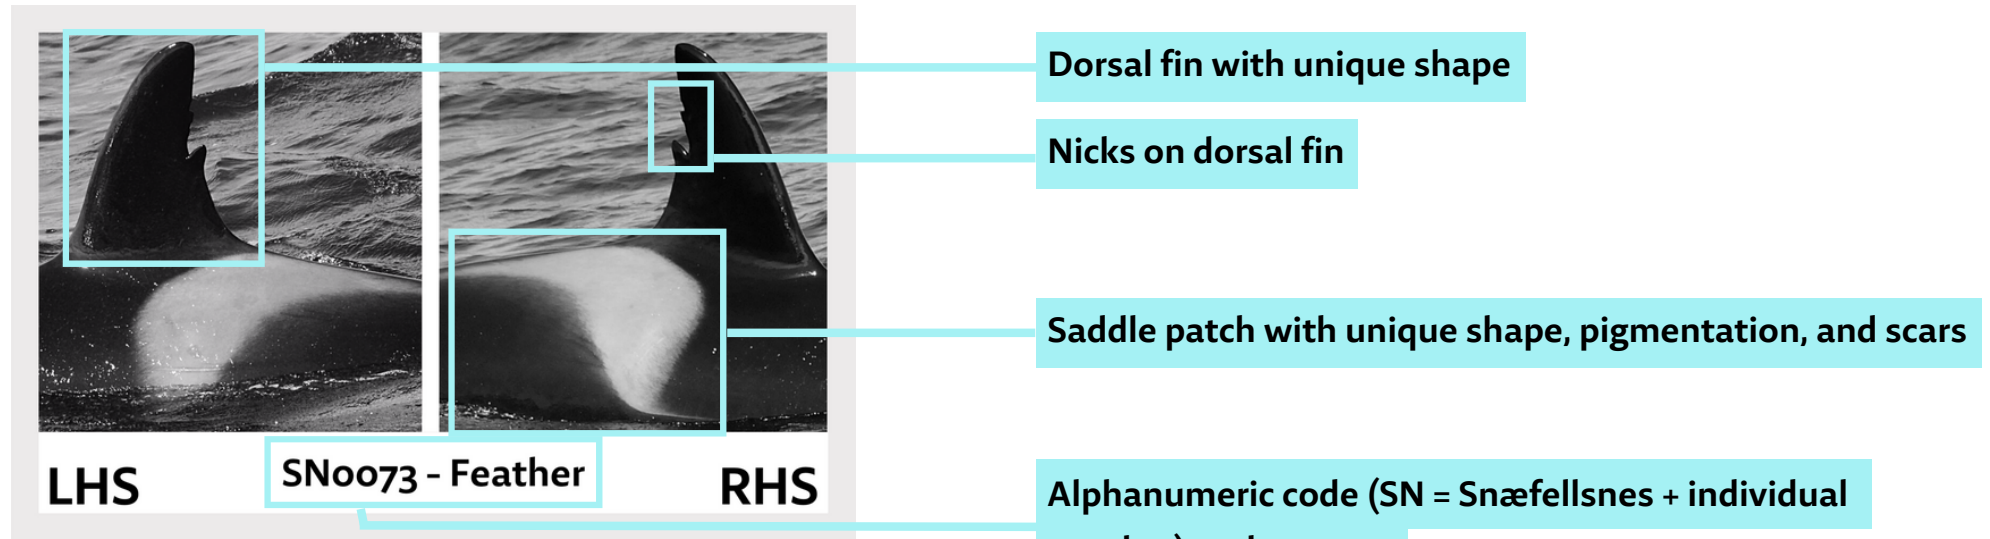

PHOTOGRAPH ANALYSIS

Identification techniques applied for this catalogue were developed by Michael A. Bigg (1982) for killer whales of the Pacific Northwest, using the shape and scarring of the dorsal fin, as well as shape, pigmentation, and scarring patterns of the saddle patch (brighter skin area below and behind the dorsal fin). In this publication, the best available left- and right-side photographs from the data set were used for each individual. As photograph collection is ongoing and involves taking and analysing an average of 40,000 pictures per year, the catalogue will be updated as appropriate, in which case the newer version always disclaims the older one.

When selecting photographs, we aim for high-quality pictures that show the dorsal fin and entire saddle patch with optimal contrast and focus, but due to unfavourable weather conditions, poor light conditions (especially during the wintertime), or brevity of encounters, these criteria cannot always be fulfilled. Therefore, pictures of medium or poor quality have also been included if they displayed sufficient distinct features of the individual to avoid duplication in the count. Individuals of which either only the left or right side is shown in the catalogue have additionally been compared with the other individuals in the catalogue via the shape and pigmentation of the eye patches, to also avoid double-listing in these cases.

Individuals are classified as male or female (see Table 1) if it was possible to determine the sex according to dorsal fin size/shape and body size, and/or the exposure of the genitals on the water surface. Females are additionally classified through repeatedly observed close associations with the same calves. ID numbers are allocated to newly discovered individuals at the time of data analysis and do not necessarily represent the order in which these individuals were first sighted.

RESULTS

The catalogue is the result of the analysis of approximately 330,000 identification images collected between 2011 and 2021, with a total of 987 individual killer whales identified and catalogued. For practical reasons, the catalogue is divided into two sections (SN0001–SN0671 and SN1000–SN1315).

Ongoing identification work has revealed movements along the Icelandic shoreline, as well as both round-trip and one-way movements of killer whales to areas outside of Iceland. There are over 30 individuals documented to travel between Scotland (including Shetland and Orkney) and Iceland (Mruszczok & Scullion, 2019; Mruszczok, Violi, et al., 2021; Scullion et al., 2021; Table 1). Individuals are often seen repeatedly in Iceland during the winter months and in Scotland in the summertime.

In 2019 and 2020, four killer whales were found to have travelled a one-way distance of over 8,000 km from Iceland via Spain and Italy to Lebanon (Mruszczok, Violi, et al., 2021; Table 1). This discovery was unique in its route and scope, being the longest one-way movement ever recorded for killer whales in the world, and the first ever killer whale identification matches between Iceland and Spain, Iceland and Italy, and Iceland and Lebanon.

The catalogue is further used to keep track of new offspring, reproductive rates, and the overall health of the population, as well as to identify injured, sick, or dead killer whales (Alves et al., 2018; Table 1). Prey-switching in individual Icelandic killer whales around Snæfellsnes is currently being investigated (Mruszczok, Rodríguez, et al., 2021).

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

My first and utmost thanks go to the Láki Tours team for the past and ongoing support, in particular Gísli Ólafsson for his great cooperation in the data collection efforts during the whale watching tours, and the skilful manoeuvring in the vicinity of killer whales. A careful assessment of the situation each time we approached a group of killer whales made it possible to collect identification pictures in a non-invasive way, and this cautiousness cannot be valued highly enough.

I am very grateful to my mentors Róbert A. Stefánsson and Menja von Schmalensee from Náttúrustofa Vesturlands for their scientific guidance and for letting me become part of their team.

For a large contribution of invaluable images from the early years (2011-2013) I would like to thank Alexa Kershaw, Cathy Harlow, Christina and Oliver Degener, Róbert A. Stefánsson, and Rob Lott. Orca Guardians volunteers and Láki Tours crew members have provided an extensive amount of support, ID images, and videos throughout the years – thank you so much to María Björk Gunnarsdóttir, Sara Rodríguez Ramallo, Joséphine Mayr, Karl O'Neill, Judith Scott, George Cowan, Skarphéðinn Ólafsson, Viðir Björnsson, Lionel Davoust, Sandrine Pantel, Shilpa Shah, Emily Widdecombe, Fangliang Xu, and Stefan Wrabetz.

Important findings on the killer whales migrating between Iceland and Scotland were only possible through long-term collaboration with killer whale enthusiasts, researchers and organizations in Scotland, Shetland, and Orkney: Karen Munro, Hugh Harrop, Andrew Scullion, Steve Truluck, Peter Hazlehurst, Phil Evans, Colin Bird, Ian Towriess, Brian Gray, Ryan Leith, Leszek Stankiewicz, and Andy Foote – thank you!

The recent discovery of killer whales travelling from Iceland via Spain and Italy to Lebanon, which also provided updated identification images of the individuals in question, was only possible with the help of a large group of people. For their close collaboration in particular I would like to thank Biagio Violi, Giulia Calogero, Elia Biasissi, Maurizio and Samuele Würtz, Milad Fakhri, and Ali Jaouhar.

Thank you to all members of the public, whale watching guides, and researchers, who have provided their identification pictures both from land and sea to complement the data set. Further contributions that have been important pieces in the puzzle have been made by Wouter Jan Strietman, Maria Strömvik, Vittoria Sesani, Nacho Oria, Ingo Stein, Tómas Freyr Kristjánsson, Stefanie Mathes, Jan and Jenny van Twillert, Dirk Boden, Uwe Wendel, Wendy van der Tuijn, John van der Werf, Rebecca Walker, Frank Dhermain, Hörður Jónsson, Börkur Kjartansson, Katharina Termühlen, Debbie Bouma, Jessica Böcker, Helen Alexander, Ronald Smit, Federico Facchin, Miquel Pons, Barbara Neubarth, Isley Reust, James Kennedy, Jean-Pierre Sylvestre, Howard Loates, Martyna Daniel, Hanna Michel, and Jonathan Rempel. Thank you also to the teams of Special Tours Wildlife Adventures and Gentle Giants Whale Watching for their cooperation on identification work.
